

Streams of Living Water

One of the most beautiful features of our great Northwest is the Columbia River. Stretching 1243 miles long it has over 100 rivers flowing into it along the way as it empties into the Pacific Ocean. While the various streams may have started in Canada, Montana, Oregon or Washington, their waters flowed together into the Columbia and ultimately the ocean. There is an image for us to consider here; the way we each have come from different places on different journeys finding ourselves coming together on Sundays as our hearts ultimately join to worship God.

Jesus said to those who would listen, “He who believes in Me, as the Scripture said, ‘From his innermost being will flow rivers of living water.’” John 7:38. Every believer has a story of their spiritual journey that led them to Jesus Christ. While we are different from one another, we share this same hope and truth in Christ. God meets us where we are and takes us where He wants us to Go; molding and transforming us into His image. Because we are different, God meets us in unique and special places; different streams of living water.

Streams of Living Water is a series to describe some of those special places where we meet God personally and passionately. Each week we will explore a different stream to show us the different ways God has given us to know Him, enjoy Him and worship Him. It is my hope that by looking at these streams of living water, we will gain a new appreciation for God as well as one another. Join us as we explore these streams together.
